

When All Else Fails

Just do the right thing.
There's no other answer. There's no other way.

Others may fault you; deride and demean you,
but to always do right, is the truest of rules.

In face of disparity, when all else have tried,
Do what you must but let truth be your guide.

Though some may choose the pipes of the piper,
The true songs of Zion must never subside.

In face of enigma, under cruel gaze of scorn,
Shun edge of the wedge, where ease is adored.

Stay true to the things you've known to be truth,
You've learned what's been pure, from days of past youth.

Though laurels of men elude your good cause,
The stand for the just, be your only applause.

When failure is lauded, keep true to your roots,
They've kept you established and grounded in good.

This must be your guidon, your standard, your fight.
Keep thinking, keep doing what's always been right.

There's no other answer. There's no other way.
If this rule will guide you, you'll always be safe.

Regardless of cost, regardless of harm.
The right thing will help you to weather the storm.

Once Kidron is crossed, the line will be drawn,
What was will be past, its splendor long gone.

It's Wisdom that's calling, she cries out to all
When all else fails, you must never fail
To do the right thing.

Just do the right thing.
